INTRODUCTION

The landscape of higher education is an everchanging and dynamic sphere that affects many people across the world. Quality assurance (QA) in higher education has a vital role in ensuring that laws, regulations and quality standards are upheld. A QA professional should ideally have knowledge of not only their own national system of quality assurance but also the workings of cross-border organisations and the European Standards and Guidelines (ESG). ECA acknowledges the complexities of such a vast network of various systems and the potential challenges in gaining an overview of QA in the EHEA. This training offers entry-level QA professionals an introduction to how various European HE stakeholders are involved in accreditation and external quality assurance, recognition of qualifications, and internationalisation of higher education.

The participants will be able:

- To gain a general understanding of quality assurance in the European higher education area (EHEA).
- To understand the landscape of cross-border quality assurance.
- To understand the role of the European Union in shaping and framing Higher Education within its member states.
- To identify similarities and differences between different national quality assurance systems.
- To better understand cross-border activities.
- Establish important contacts with quality assurance professionals from other countries

Target group

New quality assurance professionals at national quality assurance agencies, higher education institutes and student unions who have the ambition to develop professionally and immerse themselves in quality assurance on a cross-border level.

Training Facilitators

- Sebastian Steele, project manager at UKÄ and board member of ECA, ECA trainer
